CHINCHA ISLANDS .- The Chincha Islands, situated two miles from the coast of Peru, South America, in latitude 14 south, are three in number, known as the North, Middle, and South Islands. The North Island has been most extensively worked, and near two-thirds its guano has been shipped to foreign countries. From the Middle Island, about one-half the guano has been taken. The South Island is yet unworked; the been taken. The South Island is yet unworked; the working being prohibited by law.

These islands belong to the Peruvian Government; from which it derives a heavy revenue, and upon which, in the estimation of many, the existence or perpetuation of the government depends.

These islands, with their burden of wealth, have been the cause of most of the civil commotions which have convulsed Peru for the last fifteen years. But of this, more hereafter.

Much speculation has been indulged as to the cause of the deposits of manure. Some contend it is the product of a volcanic eruption, (so frequent in that country) and was immediately thrown from the bottom of the sea in nearly its present condition. Others think it has been produced by sea towls, of which there are vast quantities on different portions of the coast. My opinion is—it has accumulated, many centuries, and birds have produced a large portion of the compound.

But that a portion has been formed from the decomposition of sea animals is equally certain, for at the present time their bodies may be seen on the south side of the South Island, in different stages of decomposition; the product varying not in the least from the surrounding guano. These animals are princi-pally sea lions and seal, some of larger growth,— three or four hundred pounds weight. There are many caverns in surrounding uninhab-ited islands, where these congregate in numbers, and when intruded upon, the echo of their roaring is terrifying to any inexperienced visitor.

The Chincha Islands, before the exportation of guano, were no doubt the resort of many of these animals, where they brought their meals of fish, leaving the relics to decompose, and add to the pile of ages. It is a fact well known, that when these animals sicken, they invariably come out of water, and strive to gain the summit of an islan!. It is equally well known that flesh of all kinds, under certain chemical changes, produce the best Sal Ammoniac; and we find this the fertilizing base of guano.

It is found in a pure state, mixed in the guano-white salt, known as the Hartshorn; its strength depending on its seclusion from the atmosphere. From these, and similar facts, it may be considered certain that this rich deposit has been formed as I de-

The depth of the guano on the North Island varies; its greatest depth is near 80 feet, and it averages about 40 feet. It is quite compact, requiring the use of the pick to separate it from the mass. It is then easily broken to the required size; much pulverizing to dusty fineness. In its native state, it is a dirty gray color, but when reduced to powder assumes a reddish cast, similar to brick-but dust. So susceptible of division are its particles, that much flies off in the atmosphere, and is swept from the island by the wind, forming a lengthy cloud, which scents the air for several miles. To prepare 6 to 8 tons for shipment, is considered a day's work for a laborer. The price given to laborers for working and delivering the guano at the "Shoots," 40 to 60 rods distant, is three shillings The Government contractor, Don Domingo Elias, has four shillings and six pence per ton, and sub-lets rendered it difficult to obtain necessary workmen, and many have suffered from this cause. The greater portion of the working of the guano is performed by Chinese coolies, numbering on the two NEW BOOKS AND STATIONERY! de near 600, most of whom are on the North 100 00 Thomas King, 15 00 ble degradation, far, far worse than the condition of
